CLEVER DETECTIVE WORK.

An Absconding New York Clerk Caught at Artwerp. While on the watch for clues as to the whereabouts of one Adolph Sambalino, who formerly lived at 1191/4 Second Place, Brookyn, detectives detailed by Inspector Byrnes, have discovered and followed an interesting complication in Sambalino's domestic affairs. Adolph was a confidential clerk for David spero, a feather importer, whose place of usiness is at 606 Broadway. Mr. Spero re-

The suit is for $180, which Mrs. Hammond's cook claims is due her for services rendered Mrs. Hammond.

Dr. and Mrs. Hammond.

Dr. and Mrs. Hammond's side of the case is that they went to Long Beach on July 4, leaving their home, 43 West Fifty-fourth street, to be cared for by the cook, Julie, and the butler.

Their departure was the signal for a grand jubilee and ball held in the house by Julie and her friends, and the French cook at once was made famous by her wine dinners, dancing and songs.

Mrs. Hammond became advised of what was going on at home, and, coming to New York, discharged Julie instantly, pavir her up to date. Julie declared that she ha been hired up to the end of September, and threatened to sue for the amount she claimed was due her. business is at 606 Broadway. Mr. Spero returned last July from a business trip to Europe. He was met at the pier by Samoalino, who seemed very glad to see his employer and shook his hand heartily and told him how well he was looking.

Then, as they walked to the store, the trusted clerk told his trusting employer that, in order to adjust the books and have everything in order upon the return of the head of the firm, he had taken the accounts to his home in Brooklyn and spent many a weary night in poring over the figures. Just as his work was about finished his house had caught fire and the flames had burned up the precious books.

In passing the bundles to the gateman at the City Hall station yesterday morning the distributing porter let them fall between the cars and the platform. They dropped down through the trestle-work to the street, and the package burst open.

As ill-luck would have it, a policeman was making an arrest at the time, and there was a crowd and some confusion below. This enabled small boys to clutch the tickets and skip off, which they did so swiftly as to escape arrest.

Sambalmo suddenly disappeared, and Detectives Heidelberg and Dolan were then detailed to run him down. The house in Brooklyn in which Sambalino resided with his wife and child was watched, but no trace of the fugitive was discovered, and the detectives set themselves to watching the wife, who had positively refused to make any statement as to the whereabouts of her husband.

The son of a well-known Brooklyn liquordealer, whose name is suppressed for the present, visited the house frequently while the detectives were watching. At first he was supposed to be a mutual friend, acting as letter-carrier between Sambalino and his wife. But the aspect of the case was considerably changed when the pair one day crossed to New York, engaged apartments in the Grand Central Hotel and registered as Mr.
Tracy and wife. They spent several days in the hotel and were constantly in each other's in the Red Star steamer Belgenland, to sail Sept. 29.

It was at once suspected that she was to meet her husband abroad, and Detective Heidelberg, under instructions from Inspector Byrnes, engaged a passage in the fleet French steamer La Gascogne. The plan was for Heidelberg to get across to Havre and thence go to Antwerp, where he would arrive ahead of the Belgonland, and where it was thought Sambalino might meet his wife ou the pier.

Everything went along all right and the detective reached Havre thirty-six hours before the other steamer landed at Antwerp. A train bore him to the latter city and he was on the dock at least two hours before the arrival of the Balgenland.

He had but a short time to wait, for within five minutes he saw Sambalino, the runaway clerk, come sauntering down the pier, When told that he could consider himself when tota that he could consider himself under arrest. Sambalino was very much taken aback, but soon recovered his compos-ure and went with the detective before the authorities.
